

*Yes my dear,
we can talk to the dead...*

People are calling, curious about what I do. Talk to the dead – is she serious?

For those of you who have yet to call please allow me to explain what it is like to experience a reading. Private readings are conducted in my cozy, comfortable office which many of you have told me is like sitting in your own living room.

When we first meet, we talk for a bit to get to know one another, allow the energy to settle, and allow you to relax (most ‘first timers’ are nervous largely in part because they do not know what to expect). By the time we have had a sip or two of tea or water, the spirits have ‘shown’ themselves.

I primarily communicate with them by sensing their presence and ‘hearing’ them speak. For the most part their attitudes and personalities come through loud and clear. I usually feel what they are feeling and begin to express those feelings using mannerisms quite similar to the spirit coming through, I have been told. There are times when tears run down my cheeks ... like the other day when I was reading for a woman whose mother has graced us with her presence on previous occasions. This time her sister accompanied her to the reading. Her mother came through with such joy; I began to feel tears well in my eyes. My client turned to her sister and said, “sometimes she cries”. Hearing her say that touched my heart.

Readings tend to be a three way conversation more than a simple conveyance of information. “We” love the give and take of it all. Imagine sitting comfortably conversing with the spirit of someone who has crossed over as if they are still with us. I happen to know they are!
